TAMI DAIBER JOINS GROWING PROFESSIONAL STAFF AT C.W. CLARK
Commercial development and property management firm expands staff to meet needs of regional clients

LA JOLLA, Calif., (March 15, 2007) – With more than 20 years of experience in the local real estate industry, Tami Daiber joins C.W. Clark, Inc., as director of asset management.

In her new position, Daiber is responsible for overseeing the La Jolla-based company's real estate management and asset services division, which has handled nearly 5 million square feet of commercial space since 1974.

In addition, Daiber will serve as the primary manager for the Marketplace at Liberty Station. The $50 million mixed-use project is being developed by C.W. Clark, Inc., at the former Naval Training Station in the Point Loma neighborhood of San Diego. C.W. Clark is transforming five existing buildings along the pedestrian promenade at Liberty Station's historic core into a thriving 160,000-square-foot urban shopping center that will include a major grocery store, restaurants, one-of-a-kind boutiques, as well as a Starbucks and Trader Joe's, which opened in early February.

According to Craig Clark, president and CEO of the award-winning development firm, Daiber brings extensive property management experience and tenant improvement expertise to the company's growing list of regional clients.

"We are pleased to have Tami join our growing ranks and bring to our clients her vast real estate experience and endless energy," said Clark, noting that the 36-year-old company currently has more than $300 million in commercial, retail, hotel and urban residential development under way in California, Arizona and Oregon.

Daiber's property management experience ranges from suburban office buildings, retail shopping centers, industrial and medical office buildings and projects for a variety of institutional clients. In addition, she has managed multi-million dollar tenant improvements and completed renovation projects for major San Diego-based companies and property owners.

A graduate of University of San Diego, the Bay Park area resident and avid runner holds a California Real Estate License and the Real Property Administrator (RPA) designation from the Building Owners & Managers Association (BOMA).
